The Religion of Beauty in Woman Jefferson Butler Fletcher 2015-07-11 Excerpt from The Religion of Beauty in Woman: And Other Essays on Platonic, Love in Poetry and Society The following essays are chapters of a possible literary history of Woman. Written mostly by men, this literary history has treated, with curious alternation, its subject as idol or doll. Her influence has been held supermannish - daimonic or demonic - under the prevalence of ideals monastic, chivalric, or platonic; in the intervening moments of enlightenment, Aufklarung common sense, she has - up to date - been dissected, and declared to be stuffed with sawdust. With occasional and individual exceptions, she has apparently been contented to accept this masculine writing up - or down - of her spiritual significance. "The greater part of what women write about women," declared their champion, John Stuart Mill, "is mere sycophancy to men." Recently, perhaps, "we have changed all that;" possibly no future Meredith will be justified in charging that Their sense is with their senses all mixed in, Destroyed by subtleties these women are! The Enchanted Beauty, and Other Tales, Essays, and Sketches (Classic Reprint) William Elder 2015-07-10 Excerpt from The Enchanted Beauty, and Other Tales, Essays, and Sketches In the preface to a volume of Miscellanies published last year, entitled "Periscopics, the Author intimated his intention to follow it with another volume, "to consist of Essays, Philosophical and Ethical, more bookish in style, and more elaborate in texture." The volume now offered to the public is a compromise fulfillment of that intention. About fifty of the miscellaneous articles of that first publication have been replaced in this one by a series of Essays, to give the work its permanent form. If this book shall afford to its readers but a tithe of the advantages which its production has yielded to its author, all parties will be satisfied. Not a line in it was produced for the market. It was written under impulse, not under inducement of any kind; and, it is published for those "whom it may concern." Beauty of the Spirit is a collection of twenty-two powerful and indispensable essays on Native American life, written by one of America's foremost literary voices. Bold and impassioned, sharp and defiant, Leslie Marmon Silko's essays evoke the spirit and voice of Native Americans. Whether she is exploring the vital importance literature and language play in Native American heritage, illuminating the inseparability of the land and the Native American people, enlivening the ways and wisdom of the old-time people, or exploding in outrage over the government's long-standing, racist treatment of Native Americans, Silko does so with eloquence and power, born from her profound devotion to all that is Native American. Yellow Woman and a Beauty of the Spirit is written with the fire of necessity. Silko's call to be heard is unmistakable—there are stories to remember, injustices to redress, ways of life to preserve. It is a work of major importance, filled with indispensable truths—a work by an author with an original voice and a unique access to both worlds.

In Brain, Beauty, and Art, leading scholars in this nascent field reflect on the promise of neuroaesthetics to enrich our understanding of this universal yet diverse facet of human experience. The volume consists of essays from foundational researchers whose empirical work launched the field. Each essay is anchored to an original, peer-reviewed paper from the short history of this new and burgeoning subdiscipline of cognitive neuroscience. Authors of each essay were asked three questions: 1) What motivated the original paper? 2) What were the main findings or theoretical claims made? and, 3) How do those findings or claims fit with the current state and anticipated near future of neuroaesthetics? Together, these essays establish the territory and current boundaries of neuroaesthetics and identify its most promising future directions. Topics include models of neuroaesthetics, and discussions of beauty, art, dance, music, literature, and architecture. Brain, Beauty, and Art will inform and stimulate anyone with an abiding interest in why it is that, across time and culture, we respond to beauty, engage with art, and are affected by music and architecture.

Aesthetical and Philosophical Essays Frederick Schiller 2012-01-18 The special subject of the greater part of the letters and essays of Schiller contained in this volume is Aesthetics; and before passing to any remarks on his treatment of the subject it will be useful to offer a few observations on the nature of this topic, and on its treatment by the philosophical spirit of different ages. First, then, aesthetics has for its object the vast realm of the beautiful, and it may be most adequately defined as the philosophy of art or of the fine arts. To some the definition may seem arbitrary, as excluding the beautiful in nature; but it will cease to appear so if it is remarked that the beauty which is the work of art is higher than natural beauty, because it is the offspring of the mind. Moreover, if, in conformity with a certain school of modern philosophy, the mind be viewed as the true being, including all in itself, it must be admitted that beauty is only truly beautiful when it shares in the nature of mind, and is mind's offspring. Viewed in this light, the beauty of nature is only a reflection of the beauty of the mind, only an imperfect beauty, which as to its essence is included in that of the mind. Nor has it ever entered into the mind of any thinker to develop the beautiful in natural objects, so as to convert it into a science and a system. The field of natural beauty is too uncertain and too fluctuating for this purpose. Moreover, the relation of beauty in nature and beauty in art forms a part of the science of aesthetics, and finds again its proper place.
